New York, May 12.-Ten thousand five indred persons applauded the playing of the Giants this afternoon in their game with the Washingtons. The contest was brilliantly fought, and the home club won by timely batting. The visitors made the most hits, but came when they did the least good. Sullivan's error, the only one in the game, did not affect the score, as the New Yorks earned at four of their five runs. Radford at short fielded in his old-time style, and Maguire's

BALTIMORE, May 12.-Brown, Baltimore' colt pitcher, held the points to-day, and the Philadelphias could do nothing with him, except in the eighth inning, when they bunched three singles and scored two earned runs. In original women are regular artists' models brought over from Europe, and they are accustomed to pose for painters. They are young, slim, have never borne children, and young, sim, have never borne charles, and the lines of their figures are pare and grace-ful. the place of these slim and graceful figures the management have put on chorus women, who have apparently been chosen because of the girth of their calves and their enormous chest and hip measurements.

In Europe no model is ever permitted to wear corsets, since the confinement of the stays spoils the lines of the figure. This is not the case with the chorus girl, with whom lacing holds high place in the realm of art. Hence the illusion in the reproduction of classical pictures is lost by the substitution of the laced and distorted figures of the average chorus woman for the clean lines and classical symmetry of the figure required for the artistic standard.

"Jobson made quite a hit when he made time before he throws aside these plays which have made his reputation for others, in which his fame is not nearly so bright.

Mr. Mansfleid is a poseur and more or less a charlatan, but in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" his charlatanism has been wonderfully essful, and in "A Parisian Romance" he successful, and in "A Parisian Romance" he has shown that he is exceedingly elever and the possessor of dramatic instinct (which by the way he claims he does not possess, because there is no such thing).

He avows that the only reason he ever goes on the stage, which he detests, is to make money. If this is so, his giving up of these play is strange. Certainly there is a great deal more money in them for him if he wishes it.

This little story I cull from the Lobbyist in the Philadelphia North American. It is a unique gem, with much of the brilliance and much of the paste of Mansfield, I do not loubt that Frank Slocum really heard these Frank Slocum. Richard Mansfield's active avant courier, tells a graphic anecdote illustrating the fondness that an actor may develop for even so unromantic a tool of his profession as a wig.

"The other night," said Slocum, "Mansfield called me into his dressing room, where he was unpacking an old trunk. Out of this he drew a veteran wig, which he eyed with amusement, which subsequently bordered on emotion. He pointed at it and then soliloquiged, "Farewell, old feliow; I'll not need you any more, now that newer productions occupy my thoughts and my time. You stood by me well during the long months in which your passive talents aided the Baren Chevrial in a "Parisian Romance."

"Many a time and off have you stivered with the tremor of apoplexy, completed with my death, to the tinkle of glasses and the discord of maudin laughter we have died together nearly 100 times, old friend, and I part with you with affection, but go you trust, in your turn, like all of us, to be succeeded by newer and younger ones of your kind. Here, Slocum, he added, handing me the wig, 'take this as a souvenir of my Baron Chevrini, a part to which I am indebted for much, if not the most, of what repotation and money I have earned as an actor.

"He gave it to me with a plain feeling," continued Slocum, "and for a man as little given to sentiment as Mansfield he evinced quite as much emotion as a horseman experiences in parting with a favorite hunter."

It's really too bad that a man who can say and do such brirth things as he is never onite.

Which some will consider a not sufficient complimentary notice of the Englishman. The largest "ad." in the Mirror of May 12,

A certain western newspaper has fit to criticise the writer of this column

Mrs. Coghlan's superb talent, of her artisti and Greenroom.

Mrs. Cognian's superbalent, of her artistic methods, of the genuineness of her desire for dramatic ideals. I have at other times doubted her choice of plays and questioned her taste. I am willing to differ with my western friend if he does not believe in Miss Coghian's art.

Several of the eleverest of our amateurs from the Baker Dramatic club, the Sheridan, the Gonzaga College club, and others will give a performance of Edwin Baker's revival of the old military play, "The Baker's revival of the old military play. "The Confederate Spy," at Odd Fellows' hall, Seventh street northwest, Thursday ovening, Virtually the same cast has given the play before with great success, and the clubs represented are assured of its success. Among those on the cast are Mr. H. W. Weber, of the Sheridan club, who takes the leading comedy part, "Sockery Schneidelbecker;" Mr. Ed Baker, of the Baker Dermatic club, Mr. R. W. part, "Sockery Schneidelbecker;" Mr. Ed Baker, of the Baker Dramatic club; Mr. R. W. Low, of the Linthicum students, and Miss Kate Halloran, of the Gonzaga club.

Manager Eugene Kernan's benefit is ounced for Monday evening, June 4. His friends have been getting together and promise to vanquish all past efforts.

Fields and Hanson's is among the best of the vaudeville companies. These gentlemen themselves who run the company are way up as musical comedians, as you know if you as musical cemedians, as you know if you hear and see the many variety people. Also there are Gallagher and West, in their original conception, entitled "The Colonel and I." Cunningham and Grant, better known as the brutal brothers: Eldora and Nouvena, equilibrists and jugglers: The Salambos, the electric dynamite workers; George Austin, slack wire man; Edgar and Curran, the Irish Senator, Large and Share. wire man; Edgar and Curran, the Irish Sena-tors; Lang and Sharp, the universal comedy artists; Charley Case, eccentric monologist; Mile. Ollivette, in her marvelous feats of mind reading, and Miss Maud Beverly.

Another Coghlan subject which I have be fore discussed, because it cannot, but be interesting, is the somewhat complicated family arrangements of the Coghians and their connections. There is a chance for another par agraph under this head this week. The New knocked down and kicked, and that the pave ment was cleansed with him, as it were, by Leander Richardson as he came out after the performance.

Mr. Hichardson is tall and athletic. He recently published a story about Mr. Sullivan which no one would blame Mr. Sullivan for which no one would beame air, Sunivan for resenting. Mr. Sullivan did resent it, in the mildest manner possible, when they met. And then Mr. Richardson exercised himself with the astor right in public, which was bad form. But Mr. Richardson does not care much for form. Mr. Sullivan was battered when he was pulled away from the tough Mr. Richardson, but as he was hurried towards the stage door he asked the newspaper man to come inside where they wouldn't attract so much public attention. This Mr. Richardson seemed willing to do, but Mr. Sullivan's friend's discretion was more powerful than Mr. Sullivan's valor.

And the episode ended.

These things happen to the Coghians every day. When they aren't in the papers for a marriage, mock marriage, a fight, a divorce,

a quarrel, a love story, or something of the kind, they are dilated on by the dramatic peo-ple, because they are consummate artists. It seems to be a paying combination. We can't help wondering if all this long story of theirs has not been constructed, act by act, to make Accepted the Charge. Boston, Mass., May 12.-Rabbi Charles Fleischer, of Philadelphia, has written a letter to the president of the congregation Adath Isreal formally accepting the call to take charge of that field.
